

Copyright & Intellectual Property Notice

Last updated: September 2026

1. Ownership

Unless expressly stated otherwise, all intellectual property and creative works presented, published, developed, designed, written, programmed, produced or otherwise created by Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli and/or Jonas Lerch, private individuals based in Switzerland, remain the property of their respective creator or creators.

This includes, without limitation, works and materials created individually or jointly by these persons in connection with their projects, products, games, software, websites, applications, visual identities, graphics, illustrations, photographs, videos, animations, audiovisual materials, music and audio, written content, designs, user interfaces, source code, documentation, concepts as expressed in protected works, and other creative or technical materials.

Where a work has been created jointly, the applicable rights may be held jointly by the persons who contributed to its creation, unless a different ownership arrangement has been expressly established.

The name Convence and any associated project names, logos, visual identities, product materials and other intellectual property may likewise be subject to copyright, trademark, design or other applicable intellectual property rights, while it is currently not registered as juristic person.

2. Copyright Protection

Copyright protection in Switzerland arises automatically when a qualifying work is created. No registration or formal application is required for copyright protection to arise.

Under Swiss copyright law, protected works may include, among other things, literary and artistic works, visual and audiovisual works, graphics, photographs, music, designs and computer programs, provided that the applicable legal requirements for protection are met.

The rights holder has the exclusive right to determine whether, when and how a protected work may be used. This includes, where applicable, rights relating to reproduction, distribution, making a work available to the public, performance, presentation and adaptation.

Swiss copyright law protects the concrete expression of a creative work. Ideas, concepts, methods and principles as such are generally not protected by copyright, although their specific expression may be protected where the statutory requirements are fulfilled.

The copyright and related rights described in this notice are governed in particular by the Swiss Federal Act on Copyright and Related Rights (Copyright Act, CopA) and other applicable Swiss intellectual property legislation.

3. No Unauthorized Use

Unless expressly permitted by the respective rights holder or permitted by applicable law, no person may reproduce, copy, distribute, publish, communicate, commercially exploit, modify, adapt, translate, reverse engineer where prohibited by law, make available, sell, license, or otherwise use protected works or other protected intellectual property belonging to Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli or Jonas Lerch.

This applies to both complete works and protected portions or elements of works.

The fact that material is publicly accessible on the website, on social media, through a game, application, online service or through any other publicly accessible channel does not constitute a license or permission to use that material.

Downloading, viewing or accessing content does not transfer ownership or grant any intellectual property rights to the person accessing it.

4. Commercial Exploitation and Misappropriation

Any unauthorized copying, reproduction, distribution, publication, modification, incorporation into another product, commercial exploitation, sale, licensing, or other unauthorized use of protected intellectual property is prohibited to the extent that such use is not permitted by law.

In particular, attempts to take, copy, reproduce or otherwise appropriate protected intellectual property for the purpose of generating financial or commercial benefit without authorization may constitute an infringement of applicable intellectual property rights.

Where an infringement occurs, the rights holders reserve the right to take all appropriate legal measures available under applicable law, including seeking injunctive relief, removal or cessation of the infringing use, damages or other financial remedies where available, and initiating civil and/or criminal proceedings where appropriate.

The rights holders may also take appropriate measures against unauthorized use of their intellectual property on websites, platforms, marketplaces, social media, software repositories and other distribution channels.

5. Third-Party Material

Not every element appearing on the website or within Convence-related products is necessarily owned by Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli or Jonas Lerch.

Where third-party works, trademarks, software, fonts, libraries, photographs, music, services or other protected material are used, such material remains subject to the rights of its respective owner and may be governed by separate license terms.

Nothing in this notice is intended to claim ownership over intellectual property belonging to third parties.

6. Permitted Uses

Certain uses of copyrighted works may be permitted under Swiss law without obtaining individual permission from the rights holder, including specific statutory exceptions such as certain forms of private use, quotation, reporting of current events and other legally defined uses.

Such statutory exceptions remain subject to their respective legal requirements and limitations. Nothing in this notice is intended to restrict rights that cannot legally be restricted.

7. Copyright Notice

Copyright notices such as:

© Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli & Jonas Lerch. All rights reserved.

or

or similar, may be displayed on individual works or pages.

The absence of a copyright symbol or copyright notice does not mean that a work is free to use. Under Swiss law, copyright protection generally arises automatically upon creation of a qualifying work and does not depend on registration or the display of a copyright notice.

8. Duration of Protection

The duration of copyright protection depends on the type of work and the applicable provisions of Swiss law.

As a general rule, copyright protection in Switzerland lasts until 70 years after the death of the author, while specific rules apply to computer programs and certain other categories of protected works.

9. Applicable Law

This Copyright & Intellectual Property Notice and the intellectual property rights addressed herein are governed by applicable Swiss law, subject to any mandatory provisions of applicable international law or other applicable jurisdictions.

Nothing in this notice excludes or limits any rights or remedies that cannot legally be excluded or limited.
