

Legal Notice

Last updated: September 2026

1. Website Operator and Responsible Persons

1.1 Responsible persons

The website convence.org, including its associated pages, digital content, project presentations and other publicly accessible materials, is operated and maintained by the following private individuals based in Switzerland:

Aurelio Angellotti
Switzerland, 4600 Olten

Severin Renggli
Switzerland, 4600 Olten

Jonas Lerch
Switzerland, 4600 Olten

Together, these individuals are responsible for the operation, administration and content of this website, except where responsibility for a particular third-party service, external platform or separately identified material is expressly attributed to another person or entity.

The three individuals may work collectively under the name Convence for the presentation, development and publication of creative, technical and digital projects. The use of the name Convence on this website should therefore be understood in the context of their joint activities and projects and does not, by itself, establish that Convence constitutes a separately incorporated legal entity.

1.2 Contact information

General inquiries concerning the website, its content, intellectual property, projects or legal matters may be directed to:

Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli & Jonas Lerch
Email: contact@convence.org

For formal legal correspondence or matters for which a physical address is legally required, the responsible persons will provide the applicable postal address through the appropriate communication channel.

Where a project, product, service or commercial activity is operated through a separate legal entity in the future, the relevant legal entity and its corresponding contact information may be identified separately.

1.3 Responsibility for content

The responsible persons seek to ensure that the information published on this website is presented accurately and in good faith. However, the website contains material concerning projects that may be under development, experimental, planned, discontinued or subject to change.

The responsible persons therefore distinguish between factual information concerning existing activities and forward-looking information concerning projects, products, features or services that may not yet have reached final form.

The publication of a particular project, feature, image, demonstration, description or development statement does not necessarily constitute a binding commitment that the relevant project, feature or product will be released or remain available in the form presented.

1.4 Changes in responsibility

The persons responsible for the website, the organizational structure behind Convence, and the legal form through which individual projects are operated may change over time.

Where such changes materially affect the identity of the website operator or responsible provider, the relevant information will be updated in this Legal Notice.

2. Nature of Convence

2.1 General description

Convence is the name under which Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli and Jonas Lerch present, develop and publish creative, technical and digital work.

The activities associated with Convence may include, among other things, software development, game development, websites, applications, interactive experiences, digital products, visual design, creative works, research and experimentation and can contain content generated with artificial intelligence.

The website serves primarily as a presentation and information platform for these activities and for projects developed individually or jointly by the three individuals.

2.2 Use of the name Convence

Throughout this website, expressions such as “Convence”, “we”, “us” and “our” may be used for readability and to describe the collective activities of Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli and Jonas Lerch.

Such terminology does not necessarily indicate that every activity, product, work or project is legally owned by all three individuals in equal shares.

Ownership of a particular work depends on its actual creation, applicable agreements, licenses and other relevant circumstances.

Where a project has been created jointly, the applicable intellectual property rights may be jointly held by the respective creators. Where a work has been created individually, the relevant rights may belong to its individual creator.

2.3 No implication of incorporation

Unless expressly identified otherwise, the website does not represent Convence as a corporation, limited liability company, partnership or other separately incorporated legal person.

The fact that the name Convence is used as a common project or creative identity does not alter the legal ownership of individual works.

If a Swiss legal entity is established in connection with Convence or one of its projects, that entity may subsequently acquire ownership, licensing rights, contractual responsibilities or other legal functions in accordance with the applicable agreements and when agreed with the respective owners Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli, Jonas Lerch.

2.4 Projects and activities

The website may present multiple projects that differ in purpose, ownership structure, development status and intended audience.

A project may be:

- an individual creation;
- a jointly developed creation;
- a prototype;
- a commercial product;
- a non-commercial project;
- a work in development;
- an experimental project; or
- a project developed in cooperation with third parties.

The applicable legal and contractual relationship therefore depends on the individual project and circumstances.

3. Website Content

3.1 General information

The content of convence.org is intended to provide information about Convence, its creators, its projects, its activities and its creative and technical work.

The website may contain written descriptions, photographs, illustrations, graphics, animations, videos, software demonstrations, project documentation, technical information, development material and other forms of digital content.

The information is presented for general informational and presentation purposes unless expressly stated otherwise.

3.2 Accuracy and completeness

Reasonable efforts are made to ensure that information published on the website is accurate and appropriately maintained. Nevertheless, digital content can become outdated, incomplete or inaccurate as projects evolve. Development schedules, technical specifications, project names, features, designs, prices, availability and other information may change. Accordingly, no general guarantee is given that every statement appearing on the website will remain accurate indefinitely. Where information concerns an unfinished project, it should be understood as reflecting the relevant development status at the time of publication.

3.3 Development material

Projects presented on the website may be in active development.

Concept art, screenshots, videos, demonstrations, mock-ups, interface designs, prototypes and other materials may therefore differ from the final version of a project. Features may be added, changed or removed. Projects may be delayed, renamed, suspended or discontinued. Nothing contained on the website should automatically be interpreted as a guarantee of a particular release date, feature set, technical specification or commercial availability unless a legally binding agreement expressly provides otherwise.

3.4 Website changes

The responsible persons may modify website content at any time. This may include correcting errors, updating project information, replacing images, changing descriptions, removing discontinued projects, adding new projects or modifying the website structure. The operators do not undertake to maintain historical versions of all published material.

4. External Links

4.1 Third-party websites

The website may contain links to websites, applications, stores, social-media platforms, software repositories, video platforms and other online services operated by third parties.

These links may be provided for convenience, reference, project access, communication, distribution or informational purposes. A link does not mean that the operators control the destination website.

4.2 No responsibility for third-party content

The responsible persons have no general control over the content, security, privacy practices, availability, accuracy or continued operation of external websites.

Accordingly, no general guarantee is made regarding the content or functionality of third-party websites. Users should review the applicable terms of use, privacy policies and other legal information of third-party providers before using their services.

4.3 No automatic endorsement

The presence of a link to a third-party service does not necessarily constitute an endorsement, recommendation, sponsorship or commercial affiliation. A third-party platform may be used simply because it provides technical infrastructure, distribution, communication, hosting or another service relevant to a Convence project.

Any specific commercial relationship will be disclosed where appropriate.

4.4 Changes to external links

Third-party websites may change their URLs, content, ownership, policies or availability without notice.

Although reasonable efforts may be made to maintain functioning links, the operators cannot guarantee that every external link will remain active or lead to the same content indefinitely.

5. Intellectual Property

5.1 General reservation of rights

Unless expressly stated otherwise, intellectual property created by Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli or Jonas Lerch remains subject to the rights of its respective creator or creators.

This includes, where the applicable statutory requirements are fulfilled, literary and artistic works, software, graphics, photographs, audiovisual works, illustrations, written material, designs, interfaces, animations, music, sound, source code and other creative works.

Swiss copyright protection generally arises automatically when a qualifying work is created. No registration is required for copyright protection to arise in Switzerland.

5.2 Software and technical works

Computer programs may be protected by copyright under Swiss law. In particular, source code may constitute a protected work where the statutory requirements are met. However, copyright does not generally protect algorithms, methods, ideas or concepts as such. The protection concerns the legally protected expression of the work. Accordingly, references to intellectual property on this website should not be understood as claiming copyright over ideas, principles or concepts independently of their legally protected expression.

5.3 Other intellectual property

Depending on the circumstances, elements associated with Convence or its projects may also be protected through other intellectual property rights, including trademarks, design rights or other applicable legal protections.

The absence of a visible registration symbol does not necessarily mean that a name, logo, design or other material is free for unrestricted use.

5.4 Third-party intellectual property

Some content used in a project may belong to third parties and may be used under license, permission or another lawful basis. Such third-party rights remain with their respective owners.

Nothing in this Legal Notice claims ownership of intellectual property that belongs to a third party.

5.5 Further information

Specific information concerning copyright ownership, permitted use, unauthorized copying, commercial exploitation and enforcement is contained in the separate Copyright & Intellectual Property Notice published by Convence.

6. No Transfer of Rights

6.1 Access does not create ownership

Accessing, viewing or interacting with convence.org does not transfer ownership of any intellectual property to the visitor. Unless expressly stated otherwise, visitors receive no ownership interest in photographs, graphics, videos, written works, software, source code, designs, interfaces, logos or other protected material merely by accessing the website.

6.2 No implied license

Public availability does not constitute a general license.

Unless permission is expressly granted or a statutory exception applies, visitors may not assume that they have permission to reproduce, distribute, modify, sell, license, commercially exploit or otherwise appropriate protected material. The absence of an explicit prohibition on a particular page should not automatically be interpreted as permission.

6.3 Permitted technical access

Normal technical activities required to access the website, such as temporary browser caching or displaying a webpage on a user's device, are not intended to be prohibited by this notice where they occur as an ordinary consequence of accessing the website.

Likewise, statutory rights and exceptions under applicable law remain unaffected. Swiss copyright law recognizes certain exceptions, including specific forms of private use, quotation and reporting of current events, subject to their statutory requirements.

6.4 Commercial use

Commercial use of protected material requires an appropriate legal basis. This includes using website content in advertising, products, commercial software, promotional material, merchandise, publications or other revenue-generating activities. Where permission is granted, the scope of that permission may be limited by the specific license or agreement.

7. Availability of the Website

7.1 General availability

The responsible persons seek to maintain convence.org as an accessible and functioning website. However, continuous availability cannot be guaranteed. The website may occasionally become unavailable because of maintenance, updates, hosting problems, technical failures, security measures, infrastructure issues, software errors, network problems or circumstances outside the reasonable control of the operators.

7.2 Maintenance and updates

Maintenance may be performed without prior notice where necessary to protect the website, update infrastructure, correct errors or introduce improvements.

Some maintenance may require temporary interruption of access. Where practical, planned maintenance may be carried out in a manner intended to minimize disruption.

7.3 Third-party infrastructure

The operation of a modern website may depend on third-party hosting, content-delivery networks, software libraries, content-management systems, domain providers, security services, analytics services and other infrastructure.

Failures affecting such services may affect website availability even where the operators themselves have taken reasonable measures.

7.4 Discontinuation

The operators reserve the right to modify, suspend or discontinue individual pages, features or the website as a whole. Projects presented through the website may also be discontinued independently of the continued operation of convence.org. No entitlement to permanent availability of any particular website feature or project presentation is created by its publication.

8. No Guarantee

8.1 Informational nature

Unless expressly stated otherwise, information published on convence.org is informational rather than a contractual guarantee. Description of projects, planned features, development objectives, estimated dates and technical possibilities may represent intentions or development plans rather than binding commitments.

8.2 Accuracy

Reasonable care is taken when preparing and publishing information. Nevertheless, errors, omissions or outdated information may occur. The operators therefore do not generally warrant that every piece of information on the website is complete, current or error-free at every moment.

8.3 Project availability

The presentation of a product, game, application, service or other project does not guarantee that the project will ultimately be released, commercially offered or maintained. Development may be affected by technical, financial, organizational, creative or other circumstances. Features and specifications may also change during development.

8.4 Security

Reasonable measures may be taken to protect the website and its infrastructure. Nevertheless, no internet-based system can be guaranteed to be completely secure. Users should therefore maintain appropriate security practices when accessing websites and external services, including keeping their own devices and software appropriately updated.

8.5 Mandatory legal rights

Nothing in this section is intended to exclude or restrict rights, warranties or liabilities that cannot legally be excluded or restricted under applicable Swiss law.

Where mandatory statutory provisions apply, those provisions take precedence over any conflicting wording contained in this Legal Notice.

9. User Responsibility

9.1 Lawful use

Visitors are expected to use the website in accordance with applicable law and in a manner that does not unlawfully interfere with the rights of the operators, other users or third parties. The website may not be used for fraudulent, unlawful, abusive or otherwise prohibited activities.

9.2 Technical misuse

Users must not intentionally attempt to interfere with the technical operation or security of the website.

This includes, where unlawful, attempts to:

- gain unauthorized access to systems or accounts;
- circumvent security measures;
- introduce malicious code;
- overload or disrupt infrastructure;
- obtain unauthorized access to restricted resources;
- manipulate website functionality; or
- interfere with the availability of the website for other users.

9.3 Automated extraction

Automated collection, scraping, extraction or systematic copying of website content may be subject to intellectual property rights, contractual restrictions, technical restrictions or other applicable law.

The fact that information can technically be accessed by a browser does not necessarily grant unrestricted permission to systematically reproduce or commercially exploit it.

9.4 Intellectual property responsibility

Users are responsible for ensuring that their own use of website material does not infringe the rights of the operators or third parties. Where a user republishes, modifies, distributes or incorporates material from the website into another work, the user must independently establish that an appropriate legal basis exists.

9.5 Consequences of misuse

Where unlawful conduct or rights infringement occurs, the operators reserve the right to take appropriate measures available under applicable law.

Depending on the circumstances, this may include requesting removal of unauthorized material, restricting access, preserving evidence, contacting platform operators or pursuing civil or criminal remedies where appropriate.

10. Liability

10.1 General principle

The responsible persons seek to operate the website with reasonable care. Nevertheless, liability for every possible consequence arising from access to or use of an internet website cannot be assumed without limitation. To the extent permitted by mandatory Swiss law, liability is therefore limited in accordance with the principles described in this section.

10.2 Technical interruptions

The operators are not responsible, to the extent legally permissible, for damage resulting solely from temporary technical interruptions, unavailable infrastructure, network failures, maintenance, hosting failures or other circumstances beyond their reasonable control.

10.3 Third-party services

Where website functionality depends upon third-party services, the operators cannot guarantee the uninterrupted operation of those services. This may include hosting providers, content-management systems, analytics providers, payment providers, external platforms, software repositories, social-media services and distribution platforms. Any liability attributable solely to a third-party provider may be governed by the provider's own contractual and legal framework.

10.4 Indirect losses

To the extent permitted by applicable law, the operators shall not be liable for indirect or consequential losses arising from the use of, or inability to use, the website. This may include, where legally permissible, loss of profits, business interruption, loss of anticipated opportunities or other indirect economic consequences.

10.5 Mandatory liability

Nothing in this Legal Notice is intended to exclude liability that Swiss law does not permit to be excluded. In particular, wording concerning limitations of liability does not purport to eliminate mandatory liability arising from circumstances where such limitation would be legally ineffective. The applicable law and the specific circumstances of a claim determine whether and to what extent liability may be limited.

10.6 User's own systems

Users remain responsible for their own devices, internet connections, software and security measures.

The operators cannot guarantee that the website will be compatible with every device, browser, operating system or configuration.

11. Changes to This Legal Notice

11.1 Right to amend

The operators may amend this Legal Notice when necessary or appropriate.

Reasons for amendments may include changes to applicable law, website functionality, project structure, ownership arrangements, responsible persons, business activities, third-party services or the organizational structure associated with Convence.

11.2 Updated version

The current version published on convence.org is intended to represent the Legal Notice applicable to the website at the relevant time.

The date displayed at the beginning of the document indicates when the document was last materially updated.

11.3 Material changes

Where appropriate, material changes may be highlighted or otherwise communicated through the website. However, not every editorial, formatting or clarifying change will necessarily require a separate announcement.

11.4 Continued use

Where legally permissible, continued use of the website following publication of an updated Legal Notice constitutes continued use of the website subject to the updated website information. This section does not convert the Legal Notice into a contractual agreement where no contractual relationship exists.

11.5 Project-specific terms

Individual projects, products, games or services may be subject to additional terms.

Where such terms apply, they may take precedence over this general Legal Notice for the particular matter governed by those terms.

12. Applicable Law

12.1 Swiss law

This Legal Notice and the use of convence.org are governed primarily by Swiss law, subject to mandatory provisions of law that may apply regardless of a choice-of-law provision. Swiss intellectual property law is particularly relevant to works created and presented by the persons responsible for this website.

Swiss copyright protection is automatic for qualifying works and does not depend upon registration. Swiss copyright law also establishes specific statutory exceptions and different protection periods depending on the category of work.

12.2 International users

The website may be accessible from countries outside Switzerland.

Access from another country does not necessarily mean that Swiss law is the only law that may apply to every legal relationship or dispute.

Mandatory provisions of the law applicable to a particular user or transaction may remain relevant, particularly where consumer-protection, data-protection or other mandatory rules apply.

12.3 Consumer relationships

Where Convince or a related project enters into a consumer contract, mandatory consumer-protection provisions applicable to that relationship remain reserved.

If the website is used for electronic commerce involving goods, works or services, Swiss rules can impose additional information and transaction requirements. SECO identifies requirements concerning provider identity, contact address and email address, contract-formation steps, correction of input errors and electronic order confirmation under Article 3(1)(s) of the Federal Act against Unfair Competition. Such requirements will be addressed separately where the website provides an actual electronic ordering or contracting function.

12.4 Jurisdiction

Where a dispute is subject to Swiss jurisdiction and no mandatory jurisdiction rule provides otherwise, the competent Swiss courts shall have jurisdiction in accordance with applicable law.

This provision does not purport to remove mandatory jurisdiction rights available to consumers or other protected persons under applicable law. The appropriate court must be determined according to the nature of the dispute, the parties involved, the applicable procedural rules and any mandatory jurisdiction provisions.

12.5 International intellectual property

Intellectual property rights are territorial in nature. Swiss copyright law protects works within the scope of Swiss law, while international protection may arise through applicable international treaties and the laws of other countries. Accordingly, unauthorized use of Convence-related intellectual property outside Switzerland may also be subject to the law of the country in which the infringement occurs.

13. Contact

13.1 General contact

Questions, comments and other inquiries concerning this website may be directed to:

Aurelio Angellotti, Severin Renggli & Jonas Lerch

Email: contact@convence.org

This address may be used for general website inquiries, project-related communication and other matters concerning Convence.

13.2 Intellectual property matters

Requests concerning copyright, intellectual property, unauthorized reproduction or licensing should clearly identify the relevant material.

Where possible, an intellectual-property inquiry should contain:

- the name and contact details of the person making the request;
- identification of the work or material concerned;
- the location where the material appears;
- a description of the relevant issue;
- an explanation of the requested action; and
- any supporting information reasonably necessary to evaluate the matter.

This information allows the responsible persons to understand the issue and respond appropriately.

13.3 Alleged infringement

If a person believes that material published through convence.org infringes their intellectual property or other legally protected rights, they are encouraged to contact the responsible persons before taking further action where doing so is appropriate.

The operators may request additional information to verify the relevant circumstances. Nothing in this procedure limits any statutory rights or remedies available to the person making the complaint.

13.4 Unauthorized use of Convence material

If the responsible persons identify unauthorized copying, commercial exploitation, distribution or other unlawful use of their protected material, they reserve the right to pursue appropriate remedies.

Depending on the circumstances and applicable law, this may include requests for cessation or removal, preservation of evidence, claims for damages or other financial remedies, or civil and/or criminal proceedings. The decision whether to pursue a particular remedy will depend on the circumstances of the individual matter.

13.5 Privacy matters

Privacy and personal-data matters should be addressed in accordance with the separate Privacy Terms published on the website.

Swiss data-protection requirements include transparency concerning the identity and contact details of the data controller, purposes of processing and, where relevant, recipients of personal data. The Federal Data Protection and Information Commissioner recommends that privacy information be easily accessible, complete and understandable.

Privacy requests may therefore be directed to:

contact@convence.org

13.6 Formal correspondence

For formal legal correspondence, the sender should clearly identify the legal or factual matter to which the correspondence relates. Where a matter requires a physical address or other formal identification information, the applicable details may be provided through the appropriate communication channel.

13.7 Response

The responsible persons will review legitimate inquiries and respond as appropriate. The submission of an inquiry does not itself establish a contractual relationship, admission of liability, recognition of a claim or waiver of any legal right.
